The statement presented by the State Department read, in part:

"The American commissioner at Constantinople telegraphed the Department under date of September 20th, stating that Mr. F. Tredwell Smith, who is with the American Persian Relief Commission, passed through Constantinople on the 19th instant, coming from Erivan, Urumia, Nakhichevan and Tabriz. Toward the end of August, crossing for the second time the Tartar lines from Nakhichevan and Tabriz, he found that the atmosphere was altogether changed. He found that a Briton's life was no longer safe because there were no British troops. He also found that the Americans, too, were in danger. On July 20th the Tartars commenced battle on the Armenians at Nakhichevan and, at the end of a three-day battle, they drove out the British along with the American relief workers and started a massacre of Armenian women, children and men at Nakhichevan. The number of victims is estimated between 6,000 and 12 000. Americans testified to Mr. Smith that when they crossed into Persia at the Julfa Bridge the river was full of headless, mutilated bodies. When Mr. Smith returned along this river into Russia human bodies were still seen along the river banks."

Von Eckardt Explains How Propaganda Was Pushed; Says Carranza Was Won After Skagerack Battle

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30 .-- Count von Eckhardt, whose activities as German Minister to Mexico during the war were credited as responsible for the strong pro-German sentiment in the southern republic, warns his fellow-countrymen against emigrating to Argentina and Mexico until they are certain that conditions there are favorable for them, according to one of his recent lectures, a copy of which has just been received in Washington from Germany. Minister von Eckhardt boasts of his success in winning Car-

German school.

"The Americans," says the former Minister, "are striving to obtain for themselves the whole Mexican market and they carry on commercial espionage quite openly. American success will only be of a passing nature. German goods will again be imported and at higher prices. But the American competition must not be treated very lightly. It is desirable that the German exporters pool themselves in order to enable them to have a store in Maxica."

peoples of other countries. He emphasized the need for increased production and declared himself uncomduction and declared himself uncompromisingly opposed to the attack being waged on the packers. If kept up it would discourage production and might mean that America would become a meatless nation, he argued.

More goods and simpler habits were the only solution for high prices. Strikes, socialism, government ownership and "kindred humbugs" did nothing but exemplify the folly, avarice and chronic delusions afflicting mankind, he declared.

He said a distressing lack of thrift and a hectic desire to make millions overnight was the American vice; the alien coming here with no economic delusions was beating the American in the long-distance struggle to the goal and in another half century the sons and grandsons of aliens would own the United States.

Scathing criticism of the attitude of the Federal government and the labor unions on the transportation question, denunciation of the Plumb plan and an appeal for simpler living and fewer strikes formed the backbone of an address delivered by Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, Republican, of Illinois, before more than 1,000 members of the Traffic Club of New York at the Waldorf-Astoria last night.

He termed the Plumb plan an "impudent proposal to tax 100,000,000 people for the benefit of 2,000,000 employes, leading to a viet government under which no civinzed people could survive." Railroad employes had no more right to go ou strike than policemen or firemen, argued the Senator.

"I cannot believe the great body of railway employes will follow the lead of their radical leaders," declared the speaker. They know where such a scheme full place them. Merit, promotion and reward for long and faithful service would be supplanted by favoritism through a coterie of autocratic leaders operating under iron-clad rules. It is well known a large number of the brotherhood is opposed to the whole legislative programme of government ownership at Washington."

Touching on the food situation Senator Sherman declared that within fifty years Americans might be worrying how to feed themselves let alone the proper of other countries. He em-White House conference between President Wilson and the Senate Foreign Whitley councils, so called after the Scotch manufacturer and member of a British ministry of reconstruction committee who proposed them, have been established in more than fifty important British industries. There is a separate joint standing industrial council, as it is officially named, for each industry accepting the plan, in addition to the national council, district and local boards are created to handle problems arising within their jurisdiction. Both employers and workers are represented on the boards, which deal with the general policy of the factory, the efficiency of the plant and similar matters, as well as with possible sources of friction between capital and labor.
